THE ART OF CERAMICS WITH COLLEBI

In the heart of the hills of San Miniato, between Pisa and Florence, Fattoria Collebrunacchi is a place where agricultural tradition intertwines with a contemporary creative vision deeply rooted in the territory. It is within this authentic setting that Collebi was born—a line of objects for the table and the home that transforms the heritage of the past into living, relevant matter.

The collections draw their inspiration from the farm's ancient kilns, where bricks and everyday household objects were once produced for the rural community. The fragments and artifacts rediscovered on the estate now serve as models for a contemporary reinterpretation, in which delicate glazes and pastel tones engage in a dialogue with history without betraying the original identity of the forms.

Each Collebi piece is unique, decorated by hand by local ceramists and artisans. The gesture is measured, the mark essential, the choice of color carefully considered: each object contains a stratification of time, where memory, craftsmanship, and contemporary sensibility coexist in a conscious balance.

The collection is born within a living, working agricultural environment, where the production of historic wines and prized truffles is paired with sensory experiences that invite visitors to discover the landscape and its natural rhythms. Walks through the woods, tastings, and moments of encounter restore a slow, reflective pace—the same rhythm that guides the ceramic process.

Visiting Collebi means entering a workshop where every gesture carries meaning and every form tells a story. Here, ceramics transcend their decorative function to become an exercise in attention and care: the past is not nostalgia, but fertile material upon which the present can leave a discreet yet enduring mark, generating new beauty and continuity.
